Chicken pox making rounds in town

BY KEVIN VINK
 Review Staff

Chicken pox has been going around town recently, and Ross Ford Elementary officials have been working closely with the health unit of the Didsbury hospital to make sure they are taking the necessary precautions.

Brent Runnett, the principal of the school, said staff have been taking direction from the health unit, which has been helpful in providing information about how to keep students safe.

"They're very good at helping us understand when we should be keeping kids in school and when it might be a good idea for us to send them home. They've been giving us that kind of technical support around it."

He noted that the health unit wants to hear about chicken pox cases so that it can track the numbers.

"I greatly appreciate the health unit," he said. "They've been very helpful. When they found out early that they were seeing cases, they were really great about letting us know."

He added that school staff also emphasize the importance of children washing their hands throughout the day.

Dr. Richard Musto, medical officer of health for the Calgary zone, said that in the past, chicken pox was considered "a benign rite of passage in childhood."

Now though, Musto said the medical community has found that chicken pox can actually lead to pneumonia, bacterial infections, and even a kind of streptococcal infection.

"So it is a disease that we have targeted in Canada and elsewhere for prevention by vaccination," he said.

"We do encourage parents to vaccinate their children, because it's more than an inconvenient infection."

"It can cause ear infections, it can cause pneumonia and for newborns who are exposed via siblings, or an unvaccinated pregnant woman also could become quite sick with it, especially towards the end of the pregnancy."

He noted that the single most effective preventive measure is to simply get vaccinated.

"It's not 100 per cent effective," he added, "so you will still have children that might get infected after exposure, but generally the course of their illness is much shorter, so it's still a benefit."

One Didsbury mother, who wanted to remain anonymous, said her child recently caught the infection, despite being vaccinated in kindergarten, and was out of school for about a week in early October.

"Apparently you're contagious 10 days before spots," she said. "You're most contagious two days before you get spots, and the spots themselves, if they burst, the fluid is contagious."

She noted that she tried warm baths with oatmeal, with little success. The best thing she found for helping her child was Benadryl cream.

The cream really helped him; she said she just rubbed it on the spots and it helped the itching a lot. She said it was expensive, but it worked well.

"I also told him he couldn't go to his hockey if he continued to scratch, so I kind of bribed him a little bit, because apparently if you scratch them they just spread more because (the sores) open up and spread."

She did experience some frustration with the illness, however, because she didn't get it as a kid and didn't have any information readily available.

"When I went to the hospital," she said, "it was four hours for them to even tell me that it was chicken pox, and they really didn't have too much information on what to do."

"They weren't able to answer my questions very well, so I had to do a lot of research on the Internet on how to cope with it, because I've never dealt with it."

She said she had to find out everything by word of mouth and by going on the Internet and researching herself.

"If I had to be frustrated with anybody, it would be our health system, where I went to the emergency for four hours and they still didn't have any information for me. And the information they did give me was (confusing) and I had to do my own investigations further."

One tip she wants to give parents is not to give children Aspirin, because it can be harmful for children who are suffering from a viral illness.

Southridge Crescent upgrades scheduled for next year

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

Southridge Crescent's storm water drainage system will be undergoing some major changes next year if all goes according to plan, say town officials.

Currently, most of the storm water in Southridge Crescent runs over the road until it drains into one of three catch basins and runs out to the coulee.

"The roads are taking a real beating, because the water is having to travel overland a little further than would be recommended by say, Alberta city standards," said Karen Henry, manager of planning and infrastructure for the town.

Plans are underway to renovate the system including adding more catch basins in a stretch of the road to aid in drainage for decades to come.

The area has been an item of discussion since 2007 and 2008, said Henry.

Henry noted that some issues with the storm water drainage system were identified at that point, and the approximate costs to fix them came in around a million dollars.

"So some bits of it have been done. Like there was an outflow that needed work, so public works has been doing some bits here and there," said Henry.

The town approved a half-million dollar project for this year, she added, which wouldn't have completed the entire job, though it would have been a good start.

"We were doing a diagnostic to send a camera down to try and find where our worst trouble spot is and do a complete redo of that," she said.

After some effort just getting the cameras past encrustation in the pipes in April this year, she said ISL engineers got their assessment done and identified the most critical parts to be approximately 100 metres running southeast from 100 Southridge Place.

By the time the inspection had been completed, it was already mid-summer, which, Henry said, was a bad time to get competitive bids on construction projects.

Once the assessment was completed, ISL Engineering, which does most of the consulting and engineering services for the town, came up with four different options for the work to be done. The first alternative, according to Henry, is to trench and replace only the sewer line, which is estimated at $190,000.

The second is to replace the water line, sewer line, and road, but not the gutters, for a cost of about $407,880. The third option is the second option with gutter replacement included, costing about $452,120.

The last and most expensive option is the third alternative, with the addition of extending the underground storm lines, at an estimated cost of $519,810.

Henry got approval from council to hold off on the work until early next year, in order to get competitive bids from companies.

The funding that was set aside in the budget for the project this year will also be carried over to next year, minus the funds that were transferred to the 23rd Street resurfacing. "We'll get out to tender next January or February" she said, "when we find we get the best response from the market, award a contract, and give a successful contractor enough time to plan and get their best people on the job. That's the idea."

Henry said the town may get better prices in February.

But another reason for holding off on the project is that she can also look at the project costs alongside the budget and make a good decision based around the information available at that time.

Cleaning house

In Didsbury, sometime between Oct. 19 at 9 a.m. and Oct. 24 around 7 p.m., a home was reportedly burglarized while the residents were away, said RCMP Sgt. Jeff Jacobson.

The residence is in the 1400 block of 22 Street, he noted. A flat-screen television, computers, jewelry and firearms were reported stolen to RCMP.

Jacobson said police are continuing to investigate with the assistance of the Red Deer Forensic Identification unit and are seeking anybody who may have seen anything suspicious in the area.

It would have taken considerable time for the person or persons to take everything, he said, so the chances that somebody saw them are pretty good.

Trick-or-treating tips from the RCMP

For kids:

- Wear warm, reflective clothing
- Make sure costumes don't present a tripping hazard
- It is safer to carry flexible props, like plastic swords, than rigid ones

- Carry a flashlight if one is available
- Don't cut across yards; it will be dark, snowy, and hard to see obstacles that may be present
- Only approach houses that have their lights on
- Never enter a stranger's house or car
- Always trick-or-treat in groups

For parents:

- Ideally, young children of any age should be accompanied by an adult
- Make sure your child has eaten dinner before going out
- Make sure children know how to get in touch with you, and when to be back if they are going out alone
- Although tampering is rare, make sure children know to inspect wrappers properly before consumption (we all know they won't wait until they get home), and not to eat anything that isn't sealed without parental consent
- Keep an eye on your pets. They may be frightened by the costumes of trick-or-treaters
- If your child has allergies, ensure they know what they can and cannot eat, and why

Burial and memorial options explained at council

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

Town council invited Mitch Thompson, president of the Alberta Funeral Service Association, to make a presentation to the Committee of the Whole on Tuesday, Oct. 9.

Thompson talked on both perpetual care and memorial tree planning, informing the committee on some of the more successful practices that have been picked up by other municipalities in the area.

Perpetual care, said Thompson, is a fund that is developed and put into place to ensure cemeteries are sustainable for the long term.

Basically, he explained it is an extra fee added to plots during purchase to ensure that funds will be available for long-term maintenance.

The fees collected get put into endowment funds, he added. "Endowment funds ensure there is fiscal capacity to upkeep these things long into future."

Carstairs and Airdrie both have a perpetual care structure already for their municipally owned cemeteries, he noted, but in their case, they call it a 'maintenance fee'.

Mayor Brian Wittal said that the presentation was very informative, and helped to clarify exactly how perpetual care works.

"People are looking after (burial plots) for years and years," said Wittal. "Once you're buried there, you're there forever, and there are costs associated with that, so should we be doing something about that? Yes we probably should be."

Currently, he said, users pay for their plot once and that's all, which basically forces the proceeds from new plots to go towards the upkeep of all the other graves.

"There's always a cost of some kind," he noted. "Old-style graves with lawn, you have to cut it and weed whip it...It adds up quickly."

"We need to look at considering (perpetual care fees) as an option. Otherwise it's tax dollars that go into it, rather than a user-paid scenario."

Memorial trees was the other topic that Thompson discussed.

Many people are familiar with the idea of dedicating a tree, said Thompson, but there are some issues associated with that.

The biggest problem, he said, is when people pay for a particular tree to be dedicated, because if, for whatever reason, that particular tree doesn't fare well, sponsors may get upset.

So the most common option, he noted, is that sponsors pay towards a memorial tree park, so every tree represents their contribution.

"You have to be careful how you do it," Wittal said.

"In Didsbury, we could always use trees and parks, trees for beautification. Do we start a tree farm like we've been talking about...and maybe have a memorial wall for people's families, or whoever has donated towards it?"

"I think there's definitely going to be some discussions around it and how we can try to work that, because it helps reduce some costs as far as trees for replacement."

"It works great. We want to keep the trees we have in Didsbury alive, and we do that, but when they die, we do have to replace them when we can afford to do so."

Elks Canada celebrates 100

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

The Canadian Order of Elks is celebrating its 100th anniversary this year, and the Didsbury lodge is putting on a free spaghetti dinner on Nov. 3 at the Elks Hall to showcase some of the successes the international service club has seen through the years.

Bill Ward, secretary for the Didsbury lodge, said the club has been doing some incredible things this year to celebrate the centennial year.

"We've run a number of different things this year, different projects," said Ward.

"One of our big projects this year, nationally, is that we partnered with Habitat for Humanity and built a house in Three Hills in under 100 hours."

This event pulled in Elks members from across Alberta, he said, as well as a handful from outside the province.

"We already had the foundation and stuff in place, but in 86 hours it was ready," he added.

"We kind of all came together to work on the project and we called it the 100th Anniversary Build. We also put up $100,000 to actually pay for the building as well."

Elks Canada has also recently partnered with successful Canadian businessman Joe Roberts to raise awareness for children at risk, said Ward.

Roberts, a recovered addict who picked himself up and changed for the better, plans to push a shopping cart from Newfoundland to Vancouver, and visit lodges along the way.

He started his trial run on Canada Day in Calgary and pushed a shopping cart to Vancouver as a trial run, said Ward. He is now planning to start the first of May 2013 in Newfoundland, and it will take him 14 months to push the cart across Canada to Vancouver.

The Didsbury Lodge, which has been around for 45 years this year, also plays a large role in the community, noted Ward, as trade shows and private functions are held in the Elks Hall, which was originally a theatre and opera house.

Peter Winsor, lecturing knight (3rd vice-president) of the Didsbury Lodge, who also chaired the parade committee this year, said that although the Elks do a lot of good in the community, they may not always seek publicity.

One of the reasons for this, Winsor said, is the nature of their work.

Ward mentioned that one year, the lodge bought a special bike for a child who was suffering from seizures and muscle weakness.

"The prognosis wasn't good," said Ward, "because the child was getting progressively weaker."

"We went out and found a special bike, through her doctors, and it was actually built like a trike, but it was expandable."

"So as she got older, it could be expanded, and it had controls on the rear of it, so her mom or another person could take her out for a walk, control the speed of the bike and steering from behind, as well as her being able to do it from the front."

Initially, said Ward, she was so weak that she couldn't steer nor pedal, but the pedals could strap her feet in so that she got the exercise.

"We took the tricycle over to this little girl," he added, "...put it together, set it up, and her brother took her up and down the street, while we were standing there."

Service

"I'm watching two grandmothers and a grandfather with tears running down their faces.

"That kind of good feeling you can't buy, and you don't want anybody to pat you on the back or anything else. It's the feeling you get inside from making somebody's life better, or making the community better."

He said the last time they checked in with the family, the child was doing "extremely well," and her prognosis has changed from two to three years of life to indefinite.

Winsor added "Because at the end of the day, you've put a smile on someone's face, and that's really what it's about."

The Elks have also been running a toy program for the hospital for a number of years now, said Ward.

"We've continued for many years," he said. "As long as I've been with the lodge, we've supplied toys for kids. So if a youngster comes into the hospital, there's a toy bin. They can choose a toy, and when they leave they take it home."

"Every year," he said, "the Elks strike a budget of $400 to $500 and one of the members goes out and he and his wife check what they've got down there and they fill the supply back up with toys."

Cipperly's Pond, which is near the airport between Didsbury and Olds, is also maintained by the Elks, who have taken what used to be a simple stocked fishing pond, and turned it into a full-service campground with power and showers.

"Over the last couple years," said Winsor, "it's gone through a dramatic change from what it was previously," said Winsor. "We've had some really dedicated people out there. Before, it was, 'Do what you can when you can,' and we had a lady this year dedicate her entire summer to it."

"People wouldn't recognize it if they went out there a couple years ago to now. Now it's a full-fledged campground that you can go out to and enjoy. You can fish there, you can camp there. There's fires, decent showers; we just renovated them with tiles. It's a really nice facility now."

Winsor stated that the "Blow Your Own Horn" supper on Nov. 3, is just to remind Didsbury who and what the Elks are, and what they do for the community, and also to garner interest in those seeking to make a difference.

"It's not all work," noted Winsor. "If it was, a lot of people wouldn't be there. It's also the fellowship."

Colts put on good effort Saturday

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

The Mountainview Colts took on the Coaldale Copperheads last Saturday, Oct. 27, and despite a good effort, the Colts lost 7-5 against one of the strongest teams in the league.

Mike Clark, assistant coach for the Colts, said it was an exciting game. The Colts held a steady lead for the first period and ended up losing speed as the game progressed.

"They did good in the first," said Clark, "they lost a bit in the second, and the third they played hard, but (Coaldale) is a very good team. The boys did good."

He added that Coaldale may have come into the game thinking that they would clean house, considering that the Copperheads came into the game with a league score of 9-1-1 (wins-losses-ties) and the Colts, with 5-6-1.

"They didn't have it easy for them, we gave 'em a good fight, and we've gotta build on that for next week and the week after."

He mentioned that the referees did make some disputed calls, including penalizing the Colts when they saw that a benched player didn't have his chin strap done up.

"Everybody thinks that we should have beat them actually," noted Clark. "I think they had a good game, and when Evan Ingram got that cross-check (call), which should have never been called, it kind of changed things a little bit. But I thought they played really well, kept their composure."

Cody Moskal, coach of the Coaldale Copperheads, said that for his team, it was a slow start, but after changing up the strategy for the second and third periods, they were able to pull through.

"They were a little undisciplined to start off with," said Moskal, "but in the second and third we came out to play."
